From Monday 28th February a new Public Living Room will be opening at Homes For Good, Glasgow. It will be open weekly on Mondays from 3pm-5pm.

Public Living Rooms are set up by local people who are part of the Camerados movement. They are free places to have a chat and a cuppa and meet new people. Lois is a Camerado living in Glasgow, "I'm really looking forward to chatting to new people and learning from each other. Everyone really is welcome and I find that very exciting."

The Glasgow Public Living Room is the next to join the global network of Camerados Public Living Rooms. To find out more visit www.camerados.org

Pop-up public living room in York

Camerados is a growing movement of people from Baltimore to Blackpool who look out for each other in person and online. Anyone can be a camerado, it's a behaviour thing. Being a camerado is about how you live on a daily basis and it's based on six principles that help folk be alongside each other and get through tough times.

Camerados founder, Maff Potts believes that, "The public realm is divided into two types of places: places that sell you stuff and places that fix you. What if there was an agenda-free, no outcomes place where you had permission to be rubbish? It's amazing what happens when you come in without the intention of trying to fix people. People often have the answers themselves."

The first Public Living Room was set up in Sheffield in 2016. Since then folk have been setting them up in their communities across the UK and the world. From hospitals to universities, libraries to community centres, in cafes and even on the Brooklyn Bridge! Over this time, thousands of people have benefitted from connecting and looking out for each other.
